Section Title: Benefits Administration - Adjudication and Compensation
Subject: Transportation Controlled by Employer
Effective Date: September 9, 1976

A. POLICY

A worker is considered to be in the course of employment while in transit to and from the place of employment when the employer has direct control over the transportation. The employer is considered to have direct control over the transportation when:

- a) A vehicle is essential to employment and the employer provides the worker with a vehicle for that purpose; or
- b) A vehicle is essential to the employment and the worker furnishes his or her own vehicle in order to fulfil those obligations of employment; or
- c) The journey to or from work is made in the employer's vehicle, is under the supervision of the employer, or is directed by the employer; or
- d) The employer pays for the expense of the transportation to or from the worksite.

When the worker deviates from a reasonable and recognizable route directly associated with the employment for personal or non-work related reasons, it will constitute removal from employment and any injury arising out of or in the course of such deviation will not be compensable.
